struggle made the dream of seeing one day persons of African descent, Barack Obama and Kamala Harris, elected to the White House come true, but it also triggered a violent backlash. A History of African Americans 1950-2020: I Had a Dream - Lisa Veroni-Paccher

Despite the conservative and politically repressive atmosphere of the Cold War period, African Americans became more vocal in their demands for better living conditions. Black and interracial organizations were also created in the 1940s and 1950s, such as CORE, the Congress of Racial Equality (1942), which concentrated on strategies such as sit-ins and picket lines, or the SCLC, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (1957). Leaders emerged, some at first advocating nonviolent direct action, such as Martin Luther King, while others went for a more radical approach, such as Malcolm X and Stokely Carmichael. The Black Arts Movement in the 1960s and 1970s - Sophie Rachmuhl

The Black Arts Movement was a multifaceted cultural movement, which arose from the Civil Rights struggle and the Black Power movement. It included all the arts – music, literature, theater, dance, the visual arts – and relied on regional cultural infrastructure built after the major riots which erupted during the first half of the 1960s. It was embodied by African American artists and intellectuals, and deeply influenced American culture, in particular the relationship between popular culture and “high” culture, as well as other minority arts in the same period. We will look at its history, its different forms, its sources and its heritage.
