Présentation

Description

This seminar imparts basic knowledge of regional geography of developing and emerging countries in the global South (Africa, Asia or Latin America).

Based on concrete regional examples and by way of empirical case studies, trends of spatial development, spatial planning, and space-related conflicts are analyzed and put in a global context.

In this course, students will learn on the basis of many different empirical examples how specific local and regional social, economic and physical environments are interlinked and form specific living conditions that are interconnected with global processes.

The students are put in a position to associate idiographic and conceptual knowledge in regional geography and to abstract from the local and regional spatial live-worlds.
